Nefisa UK, United Kingdom, 2012. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Yusuf Misdaq (illustrator). 206 x 146 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Khaled Hosseini (Author of of The Kite Runner A Thousand Splendid Suns) on Lefke Automatic/Destiny of Love: This is lovely, moving work, with a sense of mystery, and the possibility of unexpected discovery, forever at hand. At times open ended, elusive, and abstract, Yusuf Misdaq s poems can also be bold, emphatic, and unafraid. As the above quote indicates, this 6th installment of Yusuf Misdaq s poetry series takes a completely unexpected turn. The book begins as a poetic travelogue of a journey to the small Mediterranean village named in the books title; there Misdaq visits a living Saint of the Sufi tradition. The literary and poetic descriptions of this amazing and mysterious man are lively and enticing, leaving the reader feeling like Misdaq s travel partner, if not intimate friend. For anyone who has ever returned from a holiday feeling uplifted, inspired and refreshed (and is aware of the precious, fleeting nature of this lovely feeling) then this book surely enters into must-have territory. Not only is the brief (15 pages or so) description of the journey itself cataloged in rich language, with evocative colors, emotions, history and culture (there is even a glossary of terms and preface), but most inspiring of all, the author tries relentlessly to extend that special post-holiday high in the second half of the book which takes place after returning home (or, Back to the fake real world, as Misdaq puts it). At this point each poem (and occasional song) becomes more and more vivid than the last, and the dazzled reader will be left wondering how on Earth this poet is capable of conjuring up such...
